  - 7 unhappy and discouraged (para. 3)
- 4 a Think of someone you know who is a thrill-seeker or a fear-avoider. What examples can you give to justify the description?
- b Work in pairs. Talk about the people you know.

Feel the fear

- 1 What woke me that night were the two loud bangs, one after the other. I stood at the top of the stairs with my heart trying to escape my body. Then the sound of crunching, scraping, chiselling. Whoever was causing this disturbance was obviously trying to enter my house at 4 a.m., uninvited, of course! How long did it take my body to calm down? Well, I have to say, my recovery was slow. Even now, the very thought can trigger the same sensation that raced through me that night and I wouldn't wish it on anyone. But some people, the 'thrill-seekers' actually go looking for this rush of adrenaline. They are the riders of roller-coasters, the fans of horror, the boy car racers. Why do they crave it? Why am I so different?
- 2 In an article I read about fear, it said there was a clear division between 'thrill-seekers' and 'fear-avoiders'. I immediately put myself down as a fear-avoider. Now, according to the article, it isn't just that I'm not courageous – I could accept that – but supposedly, I hate change, I want the world to stand still. Happiness for me, it seems, lies in being mundane; not very flattering, but at least it shows I have a keen sense of survival.
- 3 For thrill-seekers, on the other hand, it seems life is too safe, perhaps even too long! They love excitement, growth, change. Nothing pleases them more than a difficult challenge, or better still, an impossible one. And failure to find this bit of danger in the day can leave them despondent. Are these the drivers I see overtaking other cars on the wrong side of the road and jumping red lights? Presumably, just to stop themselves from feeling 'normal'.
- 4 And what about imagined fear? The article said it's played out all through childhood, and there are clear development markers. A fear of monsters under the bed is common between the ages of four and seven. After that, children leave the world of fantasy and enter the realms of possibility. They develop fears about – and I'm quoting here – 'burglars breaking in'!
- 5 I ended up wondering if thrill-seeking was part of my burglar's motivation. And if so, I wonder if in some small way, I helped him achieve this when I so courageously sent my husband downstairs to investigate.
